FELL INTO WELL AND INSTANTLY KILLED.

C. M. Boss, a well known and highly respected farmer living north of Dunkirk, was hoisting a well digger out of a fifty foot well that was being dug on Mr. Boss' homestead, and when the man was within a few feet of the top Mr. Boss suddenly relaxed his efforts and fell on to the platform and in to the well, striking on his head and crushing it.

The coroner pronounced death due to heart failure. The man that was being hoisted was thrown back into the well and lighted upon his feet without injury.

YOUNG MAN KILLED AT HAVRE?

Havre, Dec. 9.—Joseph J. Duquis, aged 20 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Duquis, of St. Peters, was fatally injured here on Sunday while traveling on a Great Northern train and died shortly after being taken to the Sacred Heart hospital in this city for treatment. Just how the accident was caused is not known, but the young man was found lying between the tracks in the local yards of the company with a ghastly wound in his forehead, as if it had been made by some sharp projection when he had attempted to get on or off the train.

Coroner Sanderson was called and empaneled a jury to inquire into the cause of the young man's death and determine his identity. A meal ticket issued by the Shaver News company, at Glasgow, brought the information that the owner of the ticket was J. J. Duquis, of 2926 Second Avenue south, Great Falls. Inquiry of the police of Great Falls gained information as to the young man and his relatives.

It was learned from Great Falls that he had left his home at St. Peter on November 14, and had been in Great Falls till Monday, December 2, when he left for Glasgow to go to work. He had lived while at Great Falls with a friend. He is survived by his parents and seven brothers and four sisters. The body will be taken to St. Peter for burial.

YOUNG MATRON IS CALLED

Mrs. John W. McDowell Passes to Great Beyond After a Brief Illness

Mary Osler McDowell, wife of John W. McDowell of Alma, passed to the great beyond late Monday night after an illness of about three weeks. As was noted in these columns Mrs. McDowell was stricken at her home and medical aid at once summoned, while she appeared to be regaining her usual strength it was thought best to bring her to town where she could have better attention and be quiet, and an automobile was sent out Monday to bring her to town. She arrived at noon Monday and although fatigued, was feeling much brighter and no intimation was had that the end was so near.

At about ten o'clock a sinking spell attacked her and soon her heart ceased to beat and the young spirit was wafted to the great unknown. Mary Osler was the youngest daughter of the late John Osler and wife, and was born in Scotland the 6th day of September twenty-six years ago. She came to America with her parents thirteen years ago and after a short residence in Minnesota came to Montana. She was married to John W. McDowell, a well known rancher of the Alma country, about nine years ago and was the mother of five children whom are thus early to be deprived of the loving hands of a devoted mother.

The funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon from the Prairie Inn, and were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Holford. The remains were encased in a beautiful casket and after the ceremony were deposited in the Chester cemetery beside her father who went before her a few years ago.

The deceased leaves a devoted husband, five little ones, her mother two brothers, John and George Osler, and a sister Mrs. John D. Vaver, all of whom were present at the funeral, except the sister who was unable to come. The entire country mourns with the bereaved and hope the Great Ruler will comfort them.

A MURDER AT WEST BUTTE.

Peter Wagner Shoots Albert
Pratt During Quarrel
Over a Road.

Shelby, April 1—A serious tragedy occurred at the Pete Wanger ranch in the West Butte country yesterday, Sunday, morning, which resulted at the death of Albert Pratt, one of the old-time stockmen of that region.

It seems that there has been bad blood between Mr. Wagner and Mr. Pratt for some years. According to accounts there have been threats on both sides. On Sunday morning Pratt was seen coming towards the Wagner ranch along the public highway. During the winter, on account of a heavy snow-drift at the Wagner ranch the travel has been permitted to deviate from the county road and make a slight detour over Mr. Wagner's land. When Pratt was seen coming it is asserted that Wagner remarked to Frank Black and wife, employed at the ranch, "Just watch me make Pratt go across the snow-drift."

He went out and when Pratt came up, took the team by the bits and ordered Pratt to go across the drift, which is said to have been impossible. Pratt immediately struck Wagner with his whip, and Wagner produced an automatic revolver and began firing. He discharged no less than five shots, three of which, it is said, took effect.

The team turned toward home and Pratt soon fell from the rig a corpse. Mr. Wagner then went to Gold Butte to give himself over to the officers, but today Sheriff Loranger passed through here enroute to Sweetgrass, from which place he will go to the scene of the tragedy, where an inquest and preliminary examination will be held.

GEORGE WILLIAM TAYLOR

Born: April 28, 1862 - Died: February 10, 1912

Chester Signal

February 15, 1912

Hark! Gabriel blows his horn and the Angel of death swooped down and without a moments warning severed the life line of a noble man, last Saturday, February 10th.

George William Taylor answered the call without a pain or struggle, so far as earthly minds can ascertain. His journey had come to an end. His maker required his assistance in the great beyond. He was ready and the spirit that had lived in the body for almost fifty years departed to the unknown from whence it came. Fifty years on earth without a blemish. Wish to the great ruler that such could be written of most of us.

George had not been exactly well but was not complaining, he made daily trips to his home just south of town and on Saturday expressed his intention to the writer of going down immediatly after the noon lunch and returning in time for the meeting of the afternoon. At dinner time he had not returned and at the request of his sister, Merrill Weldy went to find the reason, imagine the astonishment and great shock to the boy when on turning around the south side of the house he found the prostrate body of his uncle. He telephoned the shocking news to his sister, Marguerite, and immediatly the writer and Carl Winters rushed to the scene, followed closely by Dr. Melvin. The body was carried into the house and laid upon a couch, but the doctor soon stated that life had been extinct sometime, and George's earthly career had come to a most sudden and unexpected end.

He had been in unusually good spirits the day of his death but the weak heart had clogged and the flow of life blood suddenly ceased.

George William Taylor was born at Bedington, West Virginia, of John Wesley and Barbara Taylor, during the great struggle between the north and south, it being the 28th day of April 1862. His early childhood was spent at the place of his birth, but a few years later the family moved to southern Pennsylvania where he grew to manhood and learned the profession of a druggist, after which he run a store of his own for a number of years and early in the year 1894 came to Montana and was a resident of Chester ever since.

He was a man of exemplarily habits, esteemed by every one who knew him and was a great worker in the church, having been an elder in the Presbyterian church from its organization. He never took any great interest in the struggles of an active business life, preferring to lead one of quietness around home.

The remains were extremely lifelike when they were taken to the church Monday afternoon, where the Rev. Dr. Holford preached a magnificent sermon, with some appropriate music. The body was then removed to the depot and taken to Havre to be prepared for shipment to the far east, where it will be laid aside his mother and where the sweet blossoms of spring will soon burst into new life, a fitting emblem of the new life just entered by the beloved brother. The body was accompanied on its long journey by Merrill Weldy, the nephew of the deceased and to whom he had been a constant and ever faithful friend from almost the day of his birth.

It sometimes becomes the duty of an editor to pen for publication matter that tears at every heartstring and having known the dead man from childhood and having had him for a quiet, faithful counsellor for many years this becomes one of the hardest tasks it has been our lot to record, and was it not for the great goodness of the man and knowing that it means eternal peace and comfort we could not do it. The sister of the deceased, Mrs. B. B. Weldy, was so prostrated by the suddenness of the shock that she was forbidden to attend the services, however, with good medical attention and the great kindness of many willing friends she is recovering her usual health. To this little woman the blow will fall the hardest because the lost brother had been a constant companion during her years of suffering, but with the knowledge of the good life of her brother she will be able to bear the burden with less heartaches.

Besides the sister with whom the deceased had lived so long, he leaves three sisters and a brother at the old home in Pennsylvania, and an unlimited number of friends.

The writer, on behalf of himself, wife, children and relatives, wishes to express sincere thanks to all the many friends who were so ready to render any possible assistance; to Dr. Melvin for the promptness in his calls; to Dr. Holford for the many things he did in arranging the funeral and his comforting words; to the pall bearers for their services in so tenderly conveying the body on its last earthly journey; to the choir for the excellent music; to the undertakers for the most efficient services rendered and great kindness shown; to his friend, Carl Winters for his faithful services; to the several men who cared for the remains during the two nights, and, in fact to every one who in any manner assisted in the last tribute to a good man. May our own ending be as peaceful and as glorious as was Mr. Taylor's.
